

Abstract of the Disclosure

A computer method for transforming a sensor color space of a digital image to standard color space. The color pixels
5 in the sensor color space digital image are grouped and multiplied by multiple color conversion matrices without amplifying sensor noise. Different color conversion matrices are used for different parts of the image. The sum of the color error and amplified noise is minimized.